1:00pm-5:00pm Pre-conference Workshop: Changing Behavior-Alpine I

Moderator: Angie Gehlert

This workshop offers a practical approach to helping conservation programs apply behavioral insights and communication strategies that motivate action and changes in behaviors, resulting in impactful conservation movements.

By the end of this session, participants will be able to:

- Clarify behavioral goals for communication efforts and related audience segments to be reached.
- Identify methods for reducing barriers and motivating audiences to take action.
- Craft more compelling messages for various audience segments.

7:00am-8:30am: Breakfast-Outside Exhibit Hall

8:00am-9:20am Workshop: Changing Behavior-Exhibit Hall

Moderator: Margaret Lilly

Why do some environmental movements seem to suddenly “take off”, while others seem to struggle with gaining widespread adoption? In this mini-workshop we’ll dig into the Diffusion of Innovations Theory (Rogers, 2003) that explains how these movements start in the first place, and what turns a movement into a social norm that sticks. We’ll also explore why most people don’t adopt conservation behaviors, while debunking many of our long-held assumptions on what it takes to motivate change. To bring the theories to a practical place, the workshop will share five communication methods that can be applied to existing efforts to create your conservation movement.
